The Garden of Forking Paths

Chapter One: The Invitation

The letter arrived on a Tuesday, sealed with crimson wax that bore no crest. Dr. Elena Miranda held it

"You are invited," it read, "to the Garden of Forking Paths. Come at midnight. Come alone."

She had heard the legends, of course. Everyone in the city had. The Garden was a place where time b

At midnight, she stood before the iron gate. The garden beyond was overgrown, wild, lit by a moon tha

The path split almost immediately. To the left, a narrow trail lined with white roses. To the right, a wide

Eena studied both paths. The rose trail called to her sense of beauty, but the oak path promised shade

She turned right, into the shade of the oaks. The leaves rustled above her, and somewhere in the dista
